

ABSTRACT

Methods and apparatus, including computer program products, for processing a digital image. The digital image is modified at a location within the image. The modification causes a change of a first local attribute of the image at the location. The change of the first attribute is measured at the location. A second attribute of the image is adjusted at the location based on the measured change of the first local attribute, where the second attribute is different from the first attribute.

50173618.doc